

ELEMENTS OF DISTINCTION

Iconic & functional

Merging art & play

Small grain details

Making passages welcoming

Unique linear parks merging art & landscape

Adding meaning & metaphor

Interactive

ELEMENTS OF CHANGE

Art & social engagement

Celebrating community rituals

Temporary & interactive

ELEMENTS OF CONTINUITY

Bike racks

Utility covers

Seating

Surface treatments & crosswalks

Lighting

Utility boxes

12th Ave Square Park and Woonerf, Seattle, WA
– 780 square feet park that connects to a small neighborhood street. It has rain gardens and other special features that make the park feel larger.

East Mercer Way, Seattle – Lighting at night responds to the character of this area, which is both high tech and biotech.

Bergen Place Park, Seattle – Artist made these wisdom trees out of found objects and old totem poles. It creates a unique place in this traffic divider that functions as a small pocket park.

Bellingham, WA Arts District – Difference between day and night can really change the experience of the place.

Pocket Park, Pasadena, CA – A collaboration with an architect and an artist. It holds one major tree and yet it sets a strong statement, while encouraging the pedestrians to explore.

Potomac Gateway Park, Arlington, VA – A collaboration with an architect and an artist and is in the center of a denser neighborhood.

Lisbon, Portugal – This shows how a pavement can really create character and a strong sense of place.

Portland Transit Mall – This mall has sculptures and other unusual elements, which people can sit on.

Santa Monica Third Street Promenade – This area has a really strong center section, with a repetition of topiary fantastical creatures, while encouraging pedestrian movement.

State College, PA – Investigation of the role of the river.

Bellingham, WA Arts District – An entrance to the arts district in which a public space was created out of a right turn lane.

Capitol Heights, Washington, DC – Various groups that lived in the community developed the patterns of the center of the mosaic. It became a community collaboration.

Private development, Seattle WA – A small park that encourages play, with seating around. It creates an intimate setting within an area that has much larger office buildings.

